ABSTRACT A need has been established for aural rehabilitation AR sessions throughout the years The literature reviewed here demonstrates that new hearing aid users do benefit from a structured follow up AR program However this need is often not met for a variety of patient and audiologist related factors Therefore an AR program that could be viewed at home has been suggested I have developed a prototype for a CD ROM based aural rehabilitation AR program Included in the program are communication and speechreading strategies which are the most prevalent materials in AR The instructional and interaction portions of the prototype were created to be understood by the average person The prototype includes the use of video graphics and audio to support the written information and to incorporate a sense of excitement into the CD ROM based program
