

Reusing structural steel: what's in the new IStructE guide?

Florian Jones previews the guidance on reuse of structural steelwork that forms part of the Institution's forthcoming publication, Circular economy and reuse: guidance for designers.

As evidenced by the climate emergency fast-track in recent years, and the continued and increasing focus on sustainable design towards a net-zero future, there has been an increased focus on reuse of existing buildings. However, where a building cannot be repurposed or retained, it creates a secondary approach to the reuse of buildings as a potential material bank, offering a source of structural steel resources for future projects.

Steel is already regarded as a 'circular material', with assessments of steel adopted at the end of its last useful life globally¹. However, with around 30% of steel used reported in the UK compared with only 20% reused², there is a clear opportunity to transition to greater reuse of steel. It is estimated that, in the UK, between 60–80% of steel building material could be then using steel salvaged from decommissioned buildings³.

This article provides a brief introduction to Chapter 15 of the Institution's newly released Circular economy and reuse guide, which focuses on reuse of steel.

What's in the guide?

Chapter 15 begins by identifying the safety and potential thermal benefits of reusing structural steelwork, with reuse steel being a carbon intensity as low as 100kgCO₂e/m³, compared with a typical average of 1,100kgCO₂e/m³ for new structural steel. It then considers the benefits of reusing project and global emissions, noting that, as a result of reuse, if reused steel increases the total steel tonnage of a design by more than 30% compared with a new steel, it may be better than a green element for reducing the steel.

This chapter then goes on to look at options for reusing structural steelwork and the guide to available resources. These are first listed as presented in descending order from highest to lowest potential reuse value.

- 1. Reuse steelwork in situ within an existing building.
- 2. Reuse as part of an existing steel-framed structure in a different location.
- 3. Reuse as individual members as is, or cut to suit as a secondary component.

Reuse in situ is covered elsewhere in the guide, with Chapter 16 focusing on options 2–4 which require relocation of the steel.

Beyond Shelter after Disaster: Practice, Process and Possibilities David Sanderson, Jeni Burnell, 2013-09-13

Providing shelter after a disaster is recognised as one of the most complex areas of humanitarian relief and recovery. Some aid agencies have stopped providing shelter altogether after bad experiences while those that do quickly become engaged in challenges that go far beyond the provision of structures alone. Yet with the number and severity of disasters set to increase due to climate change and rapid urban growth the need for approaches that work has never been greater. This book explores the issues in three parts. The first Practice looks at lessons from past efforts. Part two Process proposes practical and effective people centred approaches. Part three considers currently neglected issues such as disability, human rights and urban oriented approaches. Through practical case studies and academic research Beyond Shelter after Disaster critiques past methods and explores future options for improving practice in one of the most complex areas of post disaster relief and recovery. This book was originally published as a special issue in Environmental Hazards: Human and Policy Dimensions.

Structural Concrete, Volume 3 fib Fédération internationale du béton, 2009. The second edition of the Structural Concrete Textbook is an extensive revision that reflects advances in knowledge and technology over the past decade. It was prepared in the intermediate period from the CEP FIP Model Code 1990 MC90 to fib Model Code 2010 MC2010 and as such incorporates a significant amount of information that has been already finalized for MC2010 while keeping some material from MC90 that was not yet modified considerably. The objective of the Textbook is to give detailed information on a wide range of concrete engineering from selection of appropriate structural system and also materials through design and execution and finally behaviour in use. The revised fib Structural Concrete Textbook covers the following main topics: phases of design process, conceptual design, short and long term properties of conventional concrete including creep, shrinkage, fatigue and temperature influences, special types of concretes such as self compacting concrete, architectural concrete, fibre reinforced concrete, high and ultra high performance concrete, properties of reinforcing and prestressing materials, bond, tension stiffening, moment curvature, confining effect, dowel action, aggregate interlock, structural analysis with or without time dependent effects, definition of limit states, control of cracking and deformations, design for moment, shear or torsion, buckling, fatigue, anchorages, splices, detailing, design for durability including service life, design aspects, deterioration mechanisms, modelling of deterioration mechanisms, environmental influences, influences of design and execution on durability, fire design including changes in material and structural properties, spalling, degree of deterioration, member design, linear members and slabs with reinforcement layout, deep beams, management, assessment, maintenance, repair including conservation strategies, risk management, types of interventions as well as aspects of execution, quality assurance, formwork and curing. The updated Textbook provides the basics of material and structural behaviour and the fundamental knowledge needed for the design, assessment or retrofitting of concrete structures. It will be essential reading material for graduate students in the field of structural concrete and also assist designers and consultants in understanding the background to the rules they apply in their practice Furthermore it should prove particularly valuable to users of the new editions of Eurocode 2 for concrete buildings bridges and container structures which are based only partly on MC90 and partly on more recent knowledge which was not included in the 1999 edition of the Textbook
