Wiring Diagram

The system regulates injection quantity and timing by varying the TFRV (TFRV) valve opening (0 to 100%) when the TFRV is in the closed position. The fuel solenoid valve is closed, causing the high-pressure fuel in the common rail to flow out to the cylinder. As a result, the force of the high-pressure fuel in the common rail is reduced, causing the injector to stop spraying fuel. When the TFRV is in the closed position, the fuel solenoid valve is closed, causing the high-pressure fuel in the common rail to flow out to the cylinder. As a result, the force of the high-pressure fuel in the common rail is reduced, causing the injector to stop spraying fuel.

Thus, through electronic control, the timing of the control signal to the TFRV determines the injection timing, and the duration of which controls a variation in the TFRV determines the injection quantity.
