The system regulates injection quantity and timing by varying the TFR (fuel rack) spring force and TFR (fuel rack) position. The fuel rack and fuel rack spring force are regulated by the high-pressure fuel in the common rail system to flow out to the injectors. As a result, the force of the high-pressure fuel in the common rail system varies the injection quantity and timing. The TFR is varied by the high-pressure fuel in the common rail system to flow out to the injectors. As a result, the force of the high-pressure fuel in the common rail system varies the injection quantity and timing.

Thus, through electronic control, the force of the common rail system to the TFR determines the injection timing, and the variation of which controls a variation in the injection quantity.
