Abstract

The logistic regression model quantifies and interprets the effect of each explanatory variable on the probability of observing the "1" (yes) category (10 and 100) versus the "0" (no) category (0 and 10). The first variable was age, ranging from 18 years to 60 years in the current population. It was coded as the reference. As a result, the effect of the first explanatory variable on the logistic odds (odds ratio) was the odds ratio of 1.00. The gender variable was coded as 1 for female and 0 for male. The effect of the second explanatory variable on the logistic odds (odds ratio) was the odds ratio of 1.00. The third variable was coded as 1 for the presence of a chronic condition (hypertension, diabetes, or asthma) and 0 for the absence of a chronic condition. The effect of the fourth explanatory variable on the logistic odds (odds ratio) was the odds ratio of 1.00. The fifth variable was coded as 1 for the presence of a chronic condition (hypertension, diabetes, or asthma) and 0 for the absence of a chronic condition. The effect of the fifth explanatory variable on the logistic odds (odds ratio) was the odds ratio of 1.00.

Thus, through statistical control, the timing of the control depends on the TSP's detection of the illegal string, and the location of what occurs is dependent on the TSP's detection of a specific event.
