

What are experiments you should be able to discuss about healthy children:

Wachsler, 1991: It is not as clear as it may seem as to what makes a happy, well-adjusted child. What is thought about when you think of a "well-adjusted" child? A child who is described as a "happy child" is probably that child is described as being happy in that you say: "How would that child respond when described as happy?" or "How would that child respond when described as happy?" or "How would that child respond when described as happy?" or "How would that child respond when described as happy?"

Questions you should be able to answer:
