

Solution

1. True. 2. True. 3. False. The historical cost principle dictates that companies record assets at their cost. Under the historical cost principle, the company must also use cost in later periods. 4. False. Faithful representation, not relevance, means that financial information matches what really happened; the information is factual. 5. True.

The Accounting Equation

LEARNING OBJECTIVE 3

State the accounting equation, and define its components.

The two basic elements of a business are what it owns and what it owes. Assets are the resources a business owns. For example, Alphabet Inc. has total assets of approximately $167.5 billion. Liabilities and owner's equity are the rights or claims against these resources. Thus, Alphabet has $167.5 billion of claims against its $167.5 billion of assets. Claims of those to whom the company owes money (creditors) are called liabilities. Claims of owners are called owner's equity. Alphabet has liabilities of $28.5 billion and owners' equity of $139.0 billion.

We can express the relationship of assets, liabilities, and owner's equity as an equation, as shown in Illustration 1.5.

Assets	=	Liabilities	+	Owner's Equity
--------	---	-------------	---	----------------

ILLUSTRATION 1.5

The basic accounting equation

This relationship is the basic accounting equation. Assets must equal the sum of liabilities and owner's equity. Liabilities appear before owner's equity in the basic accounting equation because they are paid first if a business is liquidated.

The accounting equation applies to all economic entities regardless of size, nature of business, or form of business organization. It applies to a small proprietorship such as a corner grocery store as well as to a giant corporation such as PepsiCo. The equation provides the underlying framework for recording and summarizing economic events.

Let's look in more detail at the categories in the basic accounting equation.

Assets

As noted above, assets are resources a business owns. The business uses its assets in carrying out such activities as production and sales. The common characteristic possessed by all assets is the capacity to provide future services or benefits. In a business, that service potential or future economic benefit eventually results in cash inflows (receipts). For example, consider Campus Pizza, a local restaurant. It owns a delivery truck that provides economic benefits from delivering pizzas. Other assets of Campus Pizza are tables, chairs, jukebox, cash register, oven, tableware, and, of course, cash.

Liabilities

Liabilities are claims against assets—that is, existing debts and obligations. Businesses of all sizes usually borrow money and purchase merchandise on credit. These economic activities result in payables of various sorts:

- Campus Pizza, for instance, purchases cheese, sausage, flour, and beverages on credit from suppliers. These obligations are called accounts payable.
