APRIL 1957

Bandswitching—completely self contained—performs all transmission line matching and switching functions in the high power amateur station.

Now, you can have the convenience of a completely integrated antenna matching and switching system at the kilowatt level. Bandswitching on 80, 40, 20, 15 and 11-10 meters and completely front panel controlled, the versatile Johnson "Kilowatt Matchbox" quickly and easily matches the transmitter to balanced or unbalanced lines over a wide range of antenna impedances and is capable of tuning out capacitive or inductive reactances of appreciable magnitude.

Designed for use with transmitters operating at any power up to and including 1000 watts input, the "Kilowatt Matchbox" will handle unbalanced line impedances from 50 to 1200 ohms and balanced line impedances from 50 to 2000 ohms.

Providing separate matching of the antenna to the receiver, the unit contains a heavy duty changeover relay for switching the coupler from transmitter to receiver. This relay also provides for "muting" of the receiver and for grounding the receiver antenna terminal during transmit. A special terminal is provided on the rear apex of the coupler for installation of an RF probe enabling modulation monitoring or signal monitoring with an oscilloscope or other monitoring instrument such as the Johnson 250-25 "Signal Sentry". The antenna changeover system includes an electronic time delay circuit for the relay providing "fast make-before-break" action to prevent arcing or sticking of the relay contacts and to protect transmitter and receiver components from possible damage due to high voltage transients during antenna changeover switching. Antenna tuning and matching is accomplished with only two front panel controls. When changing bands, merely switch to correct band position and adjust the controls to pre-determined values for proper RF energy transfer. Tuning is sufficiently broad so that a single setting of the controls will cover a large segment of an amateur band and, in some cases, an entire band.

FEATURES

- Matches antenna system to transmitter
- Matches antenna system to receiver
- Switches coupling circuit from transmitter to receiver
- Grounds receiver antenna terminal while transmitting
- Protects transmitter and receiver from possible damage due to high voltage transients during changeover switching
- Front panel control—no coils to change, no "tapping down" on the inductor
- Instant bandswitch on 80, 40, 20, 15 and 11-10 meters
- Provision for RF probe for monitoring signal
