

Figure 10: Monopolistic Competition in the Short Run

1. Profit-maximizing firms produce different levels of output and charge different prices than the short-run price of a given competitive industry. Indeed, there is an excess demand in monopolistic competition, the price being above short-run marginal cost (especially in monopolistic competition).
 Each firm's short-run average cost curve is U-shaped, so some firms produce and profit. Some, depending on the short-run cost curves, may be in the short-run loss zone. The short-run profit maximization is achieved.
 The short-run cost and total cost curves are U-shaped due to the law of diminishing returns. In monopolistic competition, the short-run price is above short-run marginal cost, so there is an excess demand. This is not a market equilibrium, which means that the short-run price is above short-run marginal cost. This is not a market equilibrium, which means that the short-run price is above short-run marginal cost. This is not a market equilibrium, which means that the short-run price is above short-run marginal cost.
