

10. In an experiment to measure the speed of sound in air, a loudspeaker, a signal generator and a reflector are set up as shown in Figure 14.

Figure 14

A stationary wave pattern is produced between the loudspeaker and the reflector. The intensity of the sound is monitored using a microphone connected to an oscilloscope. The microphone is moved steadily along line AB and the oscilloscope indicates alternate maximum and minimum values of sound intensity.

- (a) What name is given to the points in the stationary wave pattern at which minimum values of sound intensity occur? 1
- (b) The signal generator is adjusted until the frequency of the sound produced is 2000 Hz. The distance between two successive points of minimum sound intensity is measured as 88 mm. 3
- (i) Use this data to calculate the speed of sound in air.
- (ii) Suggest one improvement to the experiment which would result in a more accurate value for the speed of sound in air.

Justify your answer. 2

- (c) The microphone is placed at a position of minimum sound intensity. Without moving the microphone, the reflector is moved away from the loudspeaker until a minimum is again detected.

The intensity of sound at this minimum is found to be greater than the intensity of sound before the reflector was moved.

Explain this observation. 2
