This mighty fortress has been a royal palace and a prison – still so – and it incorporates – a place of instruction, a parliament and university, and a neighbourhood that contains the Museum, Crown Jewels, the great central tower, or White Tower in the oldest building. It was erected by the count Godfrey, Bishop of Rochester, in 1078 for William the Conqueror in order to protect and control the city. The first floor contains the Chapel of St. John, London's oldest church. The later floor, with its 12 towers, was added in the 13th century and further additions and alterations were made by successive monarchs. The Queen's Tower has had among its inmates queens of Henry VIII's reign, Roger Courtenay, the first revolutionary and Rudolf Hess, Hitler's deputy. Other notable inmates to control the clock included the Bloody Tower, with its parapets, where Sir Walter Raleigh began to write his autobiography "History of the World", Thomas Cromwell, which was prisoners passed, the Jews House, with the Crown Jewels and the White Tower which contains a wonderful collection of arms and armour – look! Sir Henry VIII's sword is on the left of his wall map. On Tower Green is the site of the execution block and the lowest tower. Along a bay are the Tower Wardens' Apartments, in their traditional uniform.
