

Lab 20 – Using Microinformatics to Investigate Evolutionary Relationships: More a BLAST!

Introduction:

Genome-wide (or whole-genome) studies using computational tools to predict function of the Human Genome Project, now also include and require 20,000–25,000 genes that code structural forms. This project also systematically mapped the genomes of other species, including the fruit fly Drosophila and Neurospora. The program and computer programs of the present study identify genes and molecular structures within genes to identify and map function.

Why is this information important? Being able to identify the precise location and sequence of human genes and other genes under different genetic elements. In addition, finding other relationships of genes in other species help in understanding evolutionary relationships among organisms. Many of our genes are identical or similar to those found in other species.

However, you identify proteins that are responsible for a particular disease in fruit flies. Is this same gene function identical? Does it have similar function? It should take you time to learn how to use the other human genome to try to locate the same sequence of bases as that in fruit flies. This laboratory will provide you with the tools and techniques needed to do this.

Microinformatics is a field that combines statistics, mathematical modeling, and computer-aided analysis biological data. Using microinformatics methods, entire genomes can be quickly compared to identify the genetic similarities and differences. An extremely powerful microinformatics tool is BLAST, which stands for Basic Local Alignment Search Tool. Using BLAST, you can quickly find sequences of interest and identify genes and proteins. Because the identity of similar sequences is a matter of chance.

In this investigation, you will use BLAST to compare similarities and differences information to determine a phylogenetic or evolutionary relationship (also called evolutionary tree) in an evolutionary relationship representation of species. Figure 1 below depicts a phylogenetic relationship.

Note that the relationship is based on the evolutionary tree. The tree is a representation of the evolutionary relationship of species. The tree is a representation of the evolutionary relationship of species. The tree is a representation of the evolutionary relationship of species.
