Chapter Learning Objectives and Key Points

- 1.1 Discuss how daily food choices can help or harm the body's health over time.
The nutrients in food support growth, maintenance, and repair of the body. Deficiencies, excesses, and imbalances of energy and nutrients bring on the diseases of malnutrition. Nutrition profoundly affects health. Diet influences long-term health within the range set by genetic inheritance. Nutrition has little influence on some diseases but strongly affects others. Life choices, such as being physically active or using tobacco or alcohol, can improve or damage health.
- 1.2 Describe the national Healthy People objectives for the nation, and identify some nutrition-related objectives.
Each decade, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services sets health and nutrition objectives for the nation.
- 1.3 Define the term nutrient and be able to list the six major nutrients.
Foremost among the nutrients in food is water. The energy-yielding nutrients are carbohydrates, fats (lipids), and protein. The regulator nutrients are vitamins and minerals. Food energy is measured in calories; nutrient quantities are often measured in grams. Food conveys emotional satisfaction and hormonal stimuli that contribute to health. Foods also contain phytochemicals.
- 1.4 Summarize the five characteristics of a healthy diet and describe cultural or other influences on human food choices.
Foods that form the basis of a nutritious diet are whole foods, such as ordinary milk and milk products, meats, fish, and poultry; vegetables and dried peas and beans; fruits; and grains. A well-planned diet is adequate, balanced, moderate in energy, and moderate in unwanted constituents, and offers a variety of nutritious foods. Cultural traditions and social values often revolve around foodways. Many factors other than nutrition drive food choices.
- 1.5 Describe the major types of research studies and give reasons why national nutrition research is important for the health of the population.
Scientists ask questions and then design research experiments to test possible answers. Single studies must be replicated before their findings can be considered valid. News media often sensationalize single-study findings, and so may not be trustworthy sources. National nutrition research projects, such as NHANES, provide data on U.S. food consumption and nutrient status.
