Science SOL 4.2- Plants & Animals

Deliverable: "Students will explain how different processes and structures help plants to carry out photosynthesis and reproduction."

Plants are composed of parts that function together to carry out life processes such as taking in water and nutrients.

Root Systems
The roots of a plant are the parts that anchor the plant in the soil and absorb water and nutrients. They are also responsible for storing food. The root system is divided into two main parts: the taproot and the fibrous root system.

- Taproots are the main roots that grow straight down into the soil.
- Fibrous roots are a mass of roots that grow out from the base of the plant.
- Both types of roots absorb water and nutrients from the soil.
- Roots also store food made by the plant.
- Roots anchor the plant in the soil.
- Roots also help the plant to take up water and nutrients from the soil.

Stem/Leaves
The stem of a plant is the part that supports the leaves and flowers. It also transports water and nutrients from the roots to the leaves. The leaves are the part of the plant that carry out photosynthesis. They are also responsible for storing food.

Photosynthesis
Plants use sunlight, water, and carbon dioxide to make food (sugar) and oxygen. This process is called photosynthesis. The food is used by the plant to grow and to carry out other life processes. Oxygen is released into the air.

Water Cycle
Water is essential for plants. It is taken up by the roots and moves up the stem to the leaves. In the leaves, water is used in photosynthesis. Some water is lost from the leaves through small openings called stomata. This process is called transpiration. Water is also lost from the soil through evaporation.

Reproduction
Plants reproduce in two main ways: sexually and asexually. Sexual reproduction involves the fusion of male and female gametes to form a zygote. Asexual reproduction involves the production of new plants from a single parent plant. Some plants reproduce by seeds, while others reproduce by vegetative propagation.

Plant Structure
Plants have different parts that serve different functions. The roots anchor the plant and absorb water and nutrients. The stem supports the leaves and flowers. The leaves carry out photosynthesis. The flowers are the reproductive parts of the plant. Some plants have flowers, while others do not. Some plants are annuals, while others are perennials.

Plant Adaptations
Plants have different adaptations that help them survive in their environment. Some plants have thick, waxy leaves to prevent water loss. Some plants have deep roots to reach water in the soil. Some plants have small, waxy leaves to reduce water loss. Some plants have large, flat leaves to capture more sunlight. Some plants have thorns to protect themselves from herbivores. Some plants have special relationships with other organisms, such as mycorrhizal fungi, to help them absorb water and nutrients from the soil.
