

Lab 20 – Using Microinformatics to Investigate Evolutionary Relationships: More a BLAST!

Introduction:

Genome-wide (or whole) genomics studies entire informational molecules (e.g. genomes) of the Human Genome Project, some also including and analyzing 20,000 or 25,000 genes that define a human being. This project also systematically mapped the genomes of other species, including the fruit fly, mouse and Drosophila, etc. The project also includes sequencing of the genomes of other animals, plants and microorganisms (bacteria, archaea, fungi, etc.) and their genomes.

Why is this information important? Being able to identify the precise location and sequence of human genes and other genes (e.g. human and mouse genomes) is important. In addition, finding other sequences of genes in other species helps us understand evolutionary relationships among organisms. Many of our genes are identical or similar to those found in other species.

However, you already know that the similarity between two species does not mean they are the same species. Therefore, it is important to know if the similarity is due to the fact that the two species share a common ancestor or if the similarity is due to the fact that the two species share a common ancestor. This is why we need to know the evolutionary relationships between species.

Microinformatics is a field that combines statistics, mathematical modeling, and computer-aided analysis of genomic data. Using microinformatics methods, entire genomes can be quickly compared to identify similarities and differences. An extremely powerful microinformatics tool is BLAST, which stands for Basic Local Alignment Search Tool. Using BLAST, you can input a gene sequence or protein sequence and search for genes that are identical or similar sequences in a database.

In this investigation, you will use BLAST to compare sequences and phylogenetic information to determine relationships of organisms (also called evolutionary tree) in an evolutionary tree (phylogenetic tree).

Note that the relationship is based on the evolutionary tree (phylogenetic tree) and the evolutionary tree (phylogenetic tree) is based on the evolutionary tree (phylogenetic tree). The evolutionary tree (phylogenetic tree) is based on the evolutionary tree (phylogenetic tree).
