The healthcare provider (HCP) completes a thorough assessment and finds that the client is in heart failure (HF) and suspects that he has a ventricular septal defect (VSD), a congenital heart defect.

When preparing the client's nursing care plan, the nurse identifies the priority nursing diagnosis as "decreased cardiac output."

Which nursing intervention must be included in the client's plan of care related to this diagnosis?

Assess the infant's peripheral pulses and capillary refill.

Which response is most important for the nurse to educate the parents about feeding?

"Your son will be able to suck more easily and will not be so tired from feeding."

The client's mother begins to cry and says, "I want my child to be able to have an easier time eating, but I think breast milk is best for him. It is more easily digested and contains immune properties that he needs. Isn't there anything you can do?"
