These results are shown in Table 2. As shown, until the third year of life, the children in the early intervention group (i.e., 0-3 years) were significantly ($p < .05$) more cognitively developed than the children in the late intervention group (i.e., 3-5 years). However, from the fourth year of life, the children in the late intervention group were significantly ($p < .05$) more cognitively developed than the children in the early intervention group. This pattern of results is consistent with the idea that the children in the early intervention group were more cognitively developed than the children in the late intervention group until the third year of life, but that the children in the late intervention group were more cognitively developed than the children in the early intervention group from the fourth year of life.
