Model of the control process involving a sensor, a controller, an effector and a feedback loop. The model is used to explain the homeostatic control of the body.

Model of Negative Feedback Loop

Homeostatic control systems maintain the internal environment of the body by using a negative feedback loop. This is the process by which the body responds to a change in the internal environment by activating a response that opposes the change, thereby returning the system to its set point. The negative feedback loop is the most common type of homeostatic control system.
