Further genetic studies of some, nonrecombining selfing sites, and their association with recombining sites on the same chromosome suggest different evolutionary histories for the two sets of nuclear markers. This is consistent with the fact that chloroplast markers have been used to identify the maternal lineage of some Arabidopsis accessions, but not the paternal lineage. These results and some others indicate that the evolutionary history may be quite complex, and that studies on longer scale, based on more sets of markers or on larger populations and broader geographic regions, will indeed suggest that chloroplast markers will be helpful.

Further genetic studies are needed, since numerous self-pollinating Alb. and Alba genotypes will maintain transgressive or transgressive-like progeny offspring over generations. We will focus on genetic markers, such as internal transcribed spacer (ITS) regions, trnK and trnT genes, as well as trnK and trnT genes.
