| Indicative Content Candidates' responses may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Beach to City programme is run by the RNLI to bring awareness to young people about being safe when near water. • The programme also makes young people aware of the existence of the RNLI and Lifeguards and the good work they do as a charity - about which there is very little knowledge in some places. • Primary aged school children who live in cities are targeted because 'incident statistics' show they are more 'at risk'. They live away from the coast and so don't think about the need for or work of lifeguards and being safe around water. • The programme uses 'plenty of play acting' and fun activities to make the safety messages memorable which, with 'equipment to get to grips with', would engage children and help them retain the lessons. • Important basic messages are learnt during the sessions: about sun protection and danger flags on holiday beaches and the fact that people are always having to be rescued from 'drifting inflatables' and only realise their danger when it's too late. • The programme also focuses on cities where there are inland waterways like canals, such as Birmingham and London and teaches young people how to use safety equipment available to the public. • The programme is going to be extended in the future. | |
