

SETTING TILLER

Taking a tiller measurement allows you to check the relative tension setting of the upper and lower limbs. After setting the draw weight on your bow, you will need to check the tiller measurement to make sure that you have adjusted your limbs evenly. On all Martin compound bows, "0" or even tiller will shoot perfectly. However, the tiller measurement can vary up to 1/4" closer at the bottom. There is no set measurement that provides peak performance for every shooter. To measure your tiller, simply measure from the limb pockets to the string on both ends of the bow. Some shooters find that different tiller measurements from "0" work better for them. It will not hurt your bow in any way if you experiment with tiller.

Note: Your peep sight position and your nock point position can change when you turn one limb bolt. Take detailed measurements and be sure that your nock and peep are correct each time you turn your limb bolts.

SETTING DRAW LENGTH

All Martin Bows are adjustable with the use of modules. However, you will need to refer to the section that covers your specific cam style for instructions on adjusting draw length.

SETTING ARROW REST POSITION

After your arrow rest is installed, you will need to set it at a good starting point to begin tuning. The easiest way to do this is to visually align the bowstring in the center of the grip section. If you are shooting your bow with a release aid, the prongs or blade of your shoot-through rest will need to be centered with the bow string. During tuning, your arrow rest may need to be moved in or out from its centered location. This is normal because different shooters apply different pressures to the bow. Finger shooters will need to position the rest so that the point is about 1/8" outside the string. This is to compensate for the horizontal bending of the arrow upon release. An arrow rest that provides some side support for the arrow, such as a cushion button, is best for finger shooters.
